Travel With Confidence, MASA Protects

It's the last thing you would ever plan during a vacation, but the financial and logistical burden of dealing with a death away from home can be staggering.

Basic health insurance plans and even medicare do not offer coverage that addresses dying away from home. Returning a deceased individual home can cost between $2,500 - $3,000 with international transports ranging from $5,000 to $10,000. Obtaining domestic permits can be a challenging process that varies from state to state while international arrangements usually require coordination with the consulate office after deciphering local regulations.

Thankfully, there is a way to give yourself and your loved ones lasting peace of mind with MASA TRS (Transport & Relocation Solutions). MASA covers both the expense and logistics of transporting your body if the unexpected were to occur while traveling 75 miles or more away from home.
